Ava Lee

I've been singing for as long as I can remember and writing songs since I was six. Classically trained to Grade 8 as a high soprano, lockdown truly ignited my songwriting - endless hours at the piano creating nonstop. Since then, I've been fully hands-on: writing, arranging, and performing, blending alt-pop, indie, and soul with subtle electronic textures to create an intimate, cinematic sound.

I'm a party-loving, music-obsessed singer-songwriter who thrives on performing and connecting with people. While marketing and promotion can feel like a struggle, there's nothing more natural or enjoyable to me than playing my songs for an audience. My neurodivergent brain keeps me creative, curious, spontaneous, and full of energy — and I like to think this comes through in my performances. I'm still finding my audience, but I'm eager to get out there, make more friends, and share the music with people.

In 2022, a self-produced bedroom track was featured on BBC Introducing, leading to a regional finalist spot. In March 2025, I teamed up with producer James Grunwell and the momentum accelerated. I'm currently releasing tracks from my eight-song EP Behavioural; singles Bottle Caps and Laundry have both been played by Matt Plumb (love him) on BBC Introducing, with more to come.

I love playing live and have performed at the 8 Day Weekend Festival in Saffron Walden and venues across East Anglia and London. I'm keen to expand my live shows in 2026 and open to offers.
